But to treat this subject intelligently, it is requisite to recur briefly to the peculiar origin and characteristics of the insurrectionary movement. And the first remark to be made is, that the rebellion differs from most others, in the singular fact that it did not proceed so much from the people of the States, which nominally seceded, as from the governments of those States. At the outset, it was, for the most part, a conspiracy of official persons. And to render the enormity greater, these very traitors, using the democratic party, as a means, had sought and obtained office only for the purpose of employing the power it gave them to strike down the government of the nation. This was the condition of things throughout the Southern States. The Conspirators held every position of public influence, executive, legislative, and judicial; while as cabinet ministers, or members of Congress, they controlled the administration at Washington. At length, when the opportunity, so ardently hoped for, arrived, they raised the standard of revolt; and then the loyal men of the South found themselves wholly without the means of effectual opposition to a treason which held in its...
