Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from A Study of the Fort of Dun Aengusa in Inishmore, Aran Isles, Ireland: Its Plan, Growth, and Records The facts that the fort had attracted the notice of the learned for over two hundred years, while its compeers lay undescribed till the middle of the last century; and that on the revival of sound archraeology it was studied and most impressively described by some of our greatest scholars - Petrie, O Donovan, Ferguson, and Dumaven - all told in its favour. None other of the forts - not Tara, Emania, or the Grianan of Aileach - was so honoured. It needs justification to bring forward a paper on it at present. May I, as one of the few who noted and sketched it over thirty years ago, ere its restoration, bring before the Royal Irish Academy an attempt to record its architectural history and its present condition? No one, I believe, has as yet described it in detail since its far too thorough restoration in 1884, or endeavoured to decide what of its present features are ancient, what warrant there may have been for the restored work, or what the remains have to tell to scientific antiquaries. In all this there seems, not only an excuse, but a necessity, for another essay; so I may venture to give the results of work done in 1878, and many subsequent occasions, without incurring invidious comparisons with great predecessors in the same field of study. In this spirit I lay these notes before the members of the academy. We must commence with an oft-told tale - that of the sons of Umor. In the revival of Irish nationalism...
