Excerpt: . of his highest consideration and gratitude. To that end he began the noblest work of his life, -- the Symphony in C, also known as the Ninth Symphony. It is in five movements, counting the andante introduction as one movement. Schubert began the work in March, 1828, -- at least, such is the date upon the original manuscript, -- nearly six years after the completion of his last work of a similar nature. Strange though it may seem, the Symphony in C remained hidden, not only from sight, but from knowledge, until ten years after the composer's death. In 1838 Robert Schumann, while on a visit to Vienna, discovered the work among a pile of old papers, in the house of Ferdinand Schubert, the composer's elder brother. Schumann, from his enthusiastic veneration for Franz Schubert, was induced to call upon Ferdinand,...
